Her real birthday is 21st April and her second birthday is in June to celebrate how long she has been Queen. The Queen did not go to school but had a governess called Marion Crawford. She received tutoring and excelled at languages and music. After her father's death in 1547, Elizabeth spent some time under the care of her stepmother Catherine Parr. Parr hired tutors on Elizabeth's behalf.  The child of King Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn, her much awaited birth was a huge disappointment to King Henry who longed for a boy. When Elizabeth was born, women were raised to believe men were better and if they argued, it was a crime against their religion.	Queen, rule, weak, strong, argue, disobey, crime, religion

When the war ended she and her sister slipped out of Buckingham Palace to enjoy the fun with all the crowds of people. The Queen still holds the role of patron for hundreds of different charities in Britain. She is the longest-serving monarch in British history. People either walked, travelled by boat or train or used coach horses to move from place to place.  In Victorian times, many families had 10 or more children.  Children from richer homes were well fed, wore warm clothes and had shoes on their feet. Victorians made their own entertainment at home. They had no radio or TV. They enjoyed singing, and a rich family would sing around the piano, while poorer families enjoyed tunes on a pipe or a fiddle. Rich families had large houses, with a special room for children called the nursery. This was often at the top of the house. In the nursery younger children ate, played and slept. They were looked after by a woman called a nanny. Many Victorian children were poor and worked to help their families. Few people thought this strange or cruel. Families got no money unless they worked, and most people thought work was good for children. The industrial Revolution created new jobs, in factories and mines. Many of these jobs were at first done by children, because children were cheap - a child was paid less than adults (just a few pennies for a week's work). Many children started work at the age of 5. They went to work as soon as they were big enough. Older brothers and sisters took small children to work, perhaps to a factory at the end of the street. Other children worked at home, doing jobs such as washing, sewing, sticking labels on bottles or making brushes. Workers went to hining fairs' to find jobs. A cook might hold a wooden spoon, to show what she did. A maid might hold a broom. Children often did jobs that required small size and nimble fingers. But they also pushed heavy coal trucks along tunnels in coal mines. Boys went to sea, as boy-sailors, and girls went 'into service' as housemaids. Children worked on it ystreets, selling things such as flowers, matches and ribbons. Crossing boys swept the roads clean of horse-dung and rubbish left by the horses that pulled carts and carriages. Most Victorian children played in the street or in the fields and woods. Not many families had gardens big enough to play in, and there were no children's playgrounds. Rich families had playrooms or nurserie	shilling, slate, chalk, William Morris, Lewis Carroll, farm, factory

Historical Interpretation A, C  Historical Investigations A, B, C  Chronological Understanding A, B, C, D	Trade was also greatly improved by the arrival of railways and steamships, which enabled goods to be easily transported around the world. One of Britain's main exports at the time were people, who were taken or purchased from Africa and sold as slaves. Merchants sent out ships to trade with North America and the West Indies, where England had established a network of colonies, bringing back delicacies such as tea, coffee, sugar, tobacco, cotton, silk and wine to feed an increasingly rich and growing population In 1843 the first Christmas card was created and sent, designed by John Calcott Horsley. A thousand copies of the card were printed and sold for one shilling, starting an annual tradition.  Here are some interesting facts about the work of Dr Barnardo, founder of the charity Barnardo's, who provided homes and education for poor children in Victorian Britain.  During his time in London, Thomas Barnardo became interested in the lives of the Victorian poor. He was appalled by the number of people living on the streets of London and he witnessed the horrific effects of cholera, unemployment and overcrowding. In 1870, Thomas Barnardo opened a home for boys in Stepney Causeway, providing shelter for orphans and destitute children. A sign hung on the building which said: 'No Destitute Child Ever Refused Admission'. During his life Barnardo continued to open institutions that helped to care for poor children. By his death in 1905 it is estimated that his homes and schools cared for over 8000 children in more than 90 different locations. Britain managed to build a huge empire during the Victorian period and became the most powerful and richest country in the world's population.  With the introduction of steam power Britain's core industries, such as the mining of coal, minerals and other raw materials and the production of iron, textiles and manufactured goods, were increased.  Britain became the most powerful and richest country in the world, with the largest empire that had ever existed, ruling a quarter of the	Trade, steam ship, steam train, seaside holiday, police force, stamps, bicycles, photograph, steam trains, export, slave, christmas card, tradition, Barnado, powerful, rich, empire, town, city, water, gas, electricity	Autumn 2

Photographs, telephones, cars, bicycles, stamps and steam trains were invented during this time.
YR 5	Year B	Local history study Iceni Queen - Boudicca	Celtic army.  Who Boudicca was.  Why Boudicca led an uprising against the Romans.	Historical Interpretation A, B  Historical Investigations A, B, C  Chronological Understanding A, B, C, D	In Britain we rule ourselves but in the past other countries wanted to rule us. People Like Boudicca fought people who wanted to do this. Boudicca lived over 2000 years ago in a Celtic tribe called the Iceni. These were dangerous times to live in because the Roman army was very strong.  Only 2 people wrote about Boudicca and their stories are very different.  Boudicca was married to Prasutagus, the King of Iceni in Eastern England. Some parts of Britain were ruled by Roman Empire. Prasutagus trusted the Romans and promised to leave half his land to them and half to Boudicca. The King of the Iceni had an agreement with the Romans that the Iceni would be allowed to stay in their own area and rule themselves as long as they did not cause the Romans any trouble. But when he died, the Romans took it all. They attacked Boudicca and her daughters, took all their valuable things and took all the weapons belonging to the Iceni tribe. They wanted all of the kingdom, more taxes and Boudicca to not be Queen  The uprising began with a secret meeting of Boudicca, her Iceni, and several other tribes. A propaganda campaign was launched in Colchester, then the center of Roman rule in Britain. Designed to worry the Romans, it included such actions as turning the river red and toppling the Roman victory statue erected in the center.  In the summer of C.E. 61, Boudicca's legions of united Briton tribes attacked Colchester in chariots. The uprising was launched there because the negligent Romans had erected little in the way of walls or forts for the city's defense. Celtic soldiers painted themselves blue to frighten the enemy; women also played a decisive role by remaining at the rear of the battles with the wagons. Sometimes the wives appeared near the battlefront in black robes carrying torches, as did Druid priests who shouted curses meant to frighten Romans. Boudicca's rebellion was a crucial moment in early British history as her confederacy of Briton tribes had taken the placid Roman occupiers by surprise. YR 6	Year B	Local history study Iceni Queen - Boudicca	How Boudicca's rebellion ended.  Why Boudicca's legacy is significant in British history.	Historical Interpretation A, B  Historical Investigations A, B, C  Chronological Understanding A, B, C, D	Warriors from other armies joined her Iceni tribe and they marched to their first battle.  They were victorious in their first battle but as they headed to London, they soon realised why the Romans were so hard to defeat!  A huge final battle marked the end of Boudicca's uprising against the Roman colonization of Britain. It is not known when or where exactly this battle took place, but probably occurred near the end of summer in C.E. 61 at some place between Towcester and Wall on rocky landscape. When they were out of breath and tactically vulnerable, the Romans attacked. Boudicca's army was soundly defeated. She herself fled back to the Norfolk area, and in anticipation of a terrible end at Roman hands, ingested a deadly poison. She was the last ruler of the Iceni royal line, and was allegedly buried with all its treasure.  Boudicca remained nearly lost to historical record after her death. Boudicca's reputation grew to great proportions during the reign of Queen Elizabeth I.  Boudicca has been a significant inspiration throughout the centuries to many strong women.  She is one of the most renowned women in history today due to the fact that she showed the Romans that women could be strong, brave, determined and leaders of men. However, her story was not regarded as significant and influential until it became popular during the reign of another queen who headed an army against another foreign invasion, Queen Elizabeth I.  Boudicca left a legacy of being viewed as an icon of nation resistance for the British and serves as an important cultural symbol. She has served as a heroine and role model for early feminism and inspiration.  The name Boudicca means victory and it is believed Queen Victoria has been named after her.  The warrior queen is known in history for fighting for her country and overcame major hurdles. Although Bouddica lost the final battle against the Romans, she never let them conquer her.  Her significant impact can be seen through her statue outside the Houses of Parliament.
